See the Minstrels at the Theatre to-night.

The Park City folks are having their season of mud.

Pere Hyacinthe lectures at St. Marks Cathedral at 8 o'clock this evening.

The Pleasant House ball in the Walker Opera House last evening was a delightful affair.

The interior of the Opera House presented a beautiful appearance last evening.

The Minstrels present a charge of programme at the Theatre to-night. Go and see them.

The injunction case of the D. & R. G. was not heard yesterday, but was postponed till the 22d of May.

Deputy Marshall Elliott arrived here yesterday with the escaped convict Davis, who was recaptured at San Francisco.

Yes, sinners are becoming extinct. Only $15 were added to the city coffers yesterday, being $5 for a drunk, and $10 for stealing a ride on the Utah Central.

Coffee John will soon open his new restaurant, which will be one of the features on Main street. John is a very enterprising caterer, gives his customers their money's worth, and ought to succeed.

The monthly meeting of the officers of the Y. L. M. L. A. will be held next Saturday, 26th, at 11 a. m., at two residences of Mrs. E. S. Taylor, one block and a half west of Cliff House. All interested are cordially invited to attend.

MARY A. FREEZE.

T. H. Brand, the special agent for John B. Gough's California lecture tour, is in this city making arrangements for one or more lectures here by the great temperance orator. It is expected that Mr. Grugh will be here on the 24th of May.

The way the sidewalk has been repaired in front of the Juvenile Instructor office is not generally admired. The large rocks and chinders left on the surface are unsightly and somewhat of an impediment to the travelers in that direction. By all means get out your rake and make the rough places plain.

Manager Giles is making a most desirable success of the district telegraph system, and we sincerely trust the public will sufficiently appreciate its utility to justify the enlargement which is desired by the company. Those who have adopted the system regard it as among the necessities.

Another child of Wm. Cooper, of the 7th Ward, died yesterday of diphtheria. This makes the third that has died within a few days, and during the former visit of this disease in an epidemic form the same family lost three children. It is safe to say that there is some cause inherent in the locality to produce this tragic record.

Pretty.

As one of the results of Mr. Jacob Moritz' trip to the east, he brought back with him a number of very pretty pique, which were being put in place on the entrance to all the houses carrying the product of the firm of Moritz & Cullen. They are neatly illustrated advertisements—gold lettering on Japanese tin—and reflect credit on both the originator and executor of the design. They and the beverage they hold before the public are "warranted to keep in any climate."

PERE HYACINTHE-LOYSON.

Biographical Sketch of the Great Divine.

Pere Hyacinthe-Loyson was born at Orleans in 1827, and baptised Charles Jean Marie. He was named after his uncle, Charles Loyson, the distinguished poet, whose biography is written by Sainte-Beuve, and to whose memory the French government have erected a marble slab over the door of the house where he lived. Pere Hyacinthe's father was Rector of the Academy of Pau, which office implied educational jurisdiction over a good portion of France. He was a learned and devout man, loved and often visited by the King, Charles X. The intimate relation and esteem in which Pere Hyacinthe is held by his family is told by the fact that he was his own father's and sister's confessor. His mother is of an old noble family of Savoy, whose domains lie at the foot of Mount Blanc. Their old chateau is inhabited by the uncle of the Pere, who is the rightful heir, but who has been disinherited because he has broken with the Pope. Both families of the Pere are distinguished for their piety, and have given many priests and dignitaries to the church.

He has one brother a priest and professor at the Sorbonne in Paris, and one sister a nun. His boyhood was spent at Pau, where he early began to take a great interest in the Bible and in theological studies, and began to develop poetic talent.

In 1846 young Charles Loyson— for this is his family name—entered the seminary of St. Sulpice, in Paris, the largest theological seminary in the world his profoundly religious nature leaving no doubt as to his vocation. In 1851 he was ordained priest at the Metropolitan church, Notre Dame de Paris. He was named at once professor of theology and philosophy at the theological seminary of Avignon, then at Nantes, and afterwards canon of Troy and curate at the church of St. Sulpice, at Paris. Then little did he foresee that in a few years he would be the famous preacher, attracting eager crowds of listeners at the great Metropolitan Cathedral. He soon found the life of a secular priest insufficient to satisfy his desire for a more devout and contemplative life, and when 30 years old (in 1859) the young priest entered the order of the barefooted Carmelite monks, and became years afterwards the Abbot of Paris. The obligations imposed by this fraternity are extremely austere. Constant prayers, meditations and religious exercises, spare food and coarse attire, with manual labor, formed the daily rule of these ascetics. Some of the habits in which he was thus trained have not left Pere Hyacinthe, for he still seeks much time for private meditation and retirement, although in society he is a genial gentleman whom it is always pleasant to meet.

He soon became the most noted preacher of the Roman Catholic church in France. He was offered by the Emperor Napoleon III. any vacant See in France, but then, as now, refused to be made bishop. He replied: "God has made me a preacher, and all I wish is to preach the gospel to my people." During the five years from 1864 to 1868, Pere Hyacinthe delivered his famous conferences at Notre Dame, upon the following subjects: "The Personal Life of God," "Independent Morality," "The family," "Civil Society in its Relations to Christianity and the Church." These discourses exhibited a conservatism which did not fail to receive the denunciation of ultramontanists. The Vatican itself interfered, and the Pope summoned the bold preacher to Rome in 1868. He was ordered to desist from speaking upon any controversial point, and to confine himself exclusively to those subjects upon which all Roman Catholics were united in belief. He felt this restriction upon his preaching, and more and more became the object of distrust of the Ultramontane party.

He was again summoned to Rome for having spoken in too liberal terms at the Peace League, but the Pope received him with pleasant speech and sent him away with his blessing, for he was beloved by Pius IX.

Seeing that he could not conform to the requirements of his superiors, and being especially outraged by the dogma of papal infallibility promulgated in 1870, the Pere decided to take a bold stand against the ultramontanists. In 1872 he was married to Mrs. Emilie Meriman, an American lady of New York, thereby creating a great sensation throughout the religious world.

Since that time he has labored faithfully to build up a reformed branch of the Catholic church in France, on the model of the English established church.

Some of the difficulties against which Pere Hyacinthe at first contended when preaching Catholic reform have been removed. At first he was warned not to preach on any religious topic. Officers of the government (and that the republic) stood by him while he spoke in public, ready to check or prevent any utterance that might be objectionable. It was feared he might overturn the government. With a hostile government, an opposing press, but few friends, with the immense power of the Roman church against him and infidelity scoffing; with all this, it is not strange that Pere Hyacinthe did not accomplish more—but that he stood! It was no small thing to contend boldly for these reforms: Repudiation of the Papal infallibility; claiming the right to have the Bible and the liturgy in the vernacular, and reading of the Bible by the laity; voluntary (instead of compulsory) confession; giving of the cup to the laity, and freedom of priests to marry.

He counts as friends all the leading theologians and ecclesiastical dignitaries of Protestantism, and, as he is still a man in the prime of life, it is likely that he will do much to lay a solid foundation for the new cause in France. All Christians should give him their earnest support, and especially in the matter of finances, which are as important a necessity to the cause of reform as to any other cause.

The Pere and his family, consisting of the Madame and their son little Paul, arrived here yesterday morning, and are the guests of Bishop Tuttle. Madame Loyson is a woman of extraordinary talents and mental acquirements, a wife to the Pere such as Catherine Bora was to Luther. The Pere will deliver an address this evening in the French language at St. Mark's Cathedral, at 8 o'clock.

The Minstrels.

There were but few vacant seats in the Theatre yesterday evening, and but for the bad weather the house would doubtless have been crowded to its utmost capacity. The acclamations of the audience being the best test that can be applied to a snow like that of last night, we are safe in pronouncing it a huge success, for certainly a better humored or more vociferous assemblage of people never got together inside the walls of that or any other building, the laughter being almost continuous and the applause uproarious. The specially distinctive feature of this company is that everything—jokes and all—is new; some features are not particularly attractive, and the closing piece might as well be omitted or something else substituted, for the performance would be long enough without it, and it adds nothing to the merits of the entertainment. The first part put everybody in a good humor, the fresh jokes and new style of doing things being quite enjoyable. Ellwood's singing is something marvellous; everybody thought the singer was a sure-enough woman until he pulled off his wig, so completely feminine were the voice and make-up; it was certainly one of the most perfect deceptions ever presented to any audience. Bobby Newcomb had a reputation which preceded him; he is admitted to be one of the best if not the best dancer in the world and he maintained his position yesterday evening, gaining long and loud applause. The Kine Brothers' acrobatic dancing was excellent, and the performance as a whole was satisfactory throughout. A change of programme will be presented this evening. If the weather is at all favorable the house will doubtless be crowded.

A Mammoth Edition.

The publishers of the Utah GAZETTEER and Directory have received orders for more books than had at first been provided for in the edition to come from THE HERALD presses next month, rendering it necessary to send east for more stock, maps, etc. Owing to this cause the work will be a few days late in being delivered, as Salt Lake, Ogden and Provo have not yet been touched. It is the object of the publishers to get the directory of these towns as late as possible before going to press, so as to give the most thorough and reliable information as to addresses, etc. The Gazetteer portion of the work is approaching completion and will contain in addition to the Agricultural and Manufacturing statistics and tables, a number of ably prepared papers reviewing the mining properties and industries of the Territory. These with the chronological history of Utah, sketches of prominent educational and other institutions, finely mounted maps showing railroads built and projected, etc., etc., will swell the book to about 600 pages. Messrs Sloan and Dunbar feel justly proud of the success which their work is meeting with east and west, as well as at home, and are determined to spare no pains to make the work, in every particular, first class and an influential medium through which Utah's resources and attractions shall receive due recognition at home and abroad. THE HERALD job rooms and bindery have been equipped with new press, type, material, etc., with which to do the mechanical work, and the public will have an evidence of our superior facilities in these departments when the book is out.

It is one of the peculiarities of the American people to devote all their time to business without regard to health. In this rush for money and fame, many lives are ruined, which, with proper attention and a timely use of a proper corrective could be saved. For this purpose here is nothing equal to the "Picky Ash Bitters." It relieves the system of all impurities, purifies the blood, and, by assisting nature, restores original health and vigor.

A PROMINENT VISITOR.

What He Says About Utah and the Mormons.

A HERALD reporter sought and obtained an interview yesterday with Rev. H. M. Field, editor of the New York Evangelist, who arrived here day before yesterday from San Francisco. Mr. Field is a brother of three of the most famous men in this country, Cyrus W. Field, whose name will always live as the man who carried to success the submarine telegraph, David Dudley Field, the great jurist, and Justice Field, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and he is no less famous than these in his own specialties as editor, author and traveler.

This is the second visit of the Rev. Mr. Field to Utah, he having called here when he was making a tour around the world some years ago. On that journey he took fifteen months to circumnavigate the globe, and wrote "From the Lakes of Killarney to the Golden Horn" and "From Egypt to Japan," two works which are not only of great interest and utility to the traveler and student, but which are delightful accounts of the countries and peoples of which they treat.

His great experience and knowledge of the world enables Mr. Field to form very liberal and broad views on every question which is brought to his notice. But he is very cheery of expressing opinions to newspaper reporters for fear they will give them for more than he considers they are worth. On the Utah question he said he should consider it presumptuous on his part to express any decided or unqualified opinions. He could not but admire the great industry and enterprise which seem to be characteristic of the people here, but from all of his observations in the world, among polygamous nations, and from his reflections and convictions he could never arrive at any other conclusion than that polygamy must prove a curse to any community in which it was practiced. It seemed to him to be altogether fatal to the family, which is recognized in all civilized countries, and is unquestionably, the germ and fountain head of the State. It was inconceivable to him that there could be any truly happy and blissful domestic life in such a state of society, and seemed that those who live in it must suffer untold miseries and tortures. He confessed that great social and sexual evils exist in the world, but was opposed to the opinion that the practice of polygamy could obviate or correct them, because it is as contrary to nature as are these evils themselves. That people believed in any particular doctrine or representation was no proof that it was true, because, as Macaulay had said, there is nothing so monstrous or incredible that people cannot be found to believe it.

As to the solution of the points at issue between the Mormons and the Government he had heard a great many opinions expressed by men in various positions, but himself had no idea how the matter could or would be decided. He thought that the opinion of Mr. Beecher, who recommended that the Government let the Mormons alone, was not a sound one, as he did not believe that Government could properly ignore or mark and important deviation from the general belief and sentiments of the nation, and the disregard for law which it represents.

He thought it was a bad sign to see the State so completely absorbed by the Church as he considered it to be here in Utah, and believed that a more liberal education of the people would soon cause them to abandon an institution which encroaches so much upon their liberty.

In conclusion Mr. Field said that he was much pleased with Salt Lake, which has improved so much since his former visit.

Beautiful.
The beautiful grounds of Hon. William Jennings are daily becoming more attractive as the spring advances. To the traveler who has just crossed the vast stretches of sage brush which skirt the railway for many miles on either side of Ogden, such a splendid sight must be particularly and strikingly pleasant. The maintenance of such a delightful spot at the very entrance of our beautiful city is something we may all appreciate, while its happy possessor may justly feel proud of it.

For Polygamy.

It has been rumored during the past day or two that the grand jury was investigating the charge of polygamy that had been made in the press and by common rumor against Mr. Rudger Clawson, the second marriage being alleged to have been contracted some time last year. The rumor proved correct, for yesterday afternoon Mr. Clawson was arrested by Marshall Ireland, on an indictment charging him with bigamy. He was taken before Commissioner McKay, who fixed the bond for the release of the accused at $3,000. Security was at once given and Mr. Clawson set at liberty. It is not known when the case will come up for trial, but it will hardly be heard at the present term of court.
